Suppose I have an integer variable int myInt = 0;. I want to change this to int myInt = 1; But I want myInt to increment by 1 in a meaningful way. For example, in C++, I can do myInt = myInt + 1; to increment by 1. But I don't want to calculate myInt + 1; and then assign it. I want to store the new value in a variable without having to first calculate the new value. How would I do this? A: You could use an auto variable auto myInt = myInt + 1; A: I want to store the new value in a variable without having to first calculate the new value You can store the new value without having to calculate it, as you have observed. Just assign a variable to it. int x = 5; int y = (++x) + 1; std::cout
