To elucidate the merits of different surgical strategies for the treatment of ruptured aneurysms of the middle cerebral artery. Retrospective case review. A university-affiliated tertiary care center. From January 1983 to December 1993, we retrospectively reviewed the medical records of 13 patients with ruptured aneurysms of the middle cerebral artery. All patients underwent surgical treatment with a standard occipital transtentorial approach. We distinguished two groups in terms of surgical strategy and evaluated the clinical outcome: Group A ($n = 4$): no aneurysmal clipping and no carotid ligation. Group B ($n = 6$): aneurysmal clipping and ligation of the carotid artery. Group A had favorable outcomes in terms of mortality and morbidity. Group B had a high incidence of postoperative morbidity ($n = 2$) including mental deterioration. A ruptured aneurysm of the middle cerebral artery can be managed successfully by an aggressive surgical approach, including aneurysmal clipping with or without carotid ligation. The risk of postoperative cerebral infarction and mental deterioration seems relatively high when carotid ligation is not performed. Therefore, it is recommended that carotid ligation be performed in the treatment of middle cerebral artery aneurysms.The present disclosure relates to accessing storage, and more specifically, to backing up data on a cloud storage and/or on a non-cloud storage. Traditional backup systems involve the transfer of data over a network connection to a storage device at a backup location. The data is sent in units that are commonly referred to as "blocks." A block can be any size, however, for convenience, a block can be of a size that is substantially equal to the amount of data that can be stored on a typical hard disk drive. A conventional backup system transfers data by sending the data in a block to a storage server, which stores the data. A conventional backup system can write data to and read data from a storage server by sending the data
