Fewer than half of religious leaders in the U.S. are welcoming LGBT members to their faith communities, according to a new survey from the American Religious Identification Survey. In the survey, which was conducted in November and took almost three years to complete, only 45 percent of church and synagogue leaders reported accepting gay and transgender people into their congregations. The survey measured LGBT acceptance based on three questions: would the leader (past or present) provide services to an LGBT person, would the leader welcome an LGBT friend into their congregation and would the leader advocate LGBT issues
